ABOUT JAPANESE WHISKY

Japan is the second largest producer of single malt whisky after Scotland.

Home to rich natural resources and climates that match that of some of Scotland's most distinguished distilleries, Japan has all the right elements to mimic the conditions for producing a wide range of styles including both Islay and Speyside allowing them to produce some world class whiskies.

Japanese whisky has frequently won highly coveted awards such as the "Worlds Best Single Malt" and "Worlds Best Blended Whisky" to name a few.

What is really impressive and one of the main reasons for their continued success is that unlike Scotland where each distillery will focus on a particular style of whisky, distillers in Japan will create lots of different styles of whiskies so the blends all come from in house casks.

This allows them to really craft their blends from the very beginning and is one of the main reasons Japanese blends are so highly regarded

THE INFLUENCE OF WOOD ON WHISKY

Many of the characteristics and flavours of whisky are picked up from the wooden casks that it spends its life maturing in. Historically any type of wood may be used to make casks but today the law states all casks should be constructed of oak.

Selected for its toughness, wood plays a crucial role in the development of malt whisky, with its porous qualities that allow oxygen in and out of the cask & its tight grain structure that prevents leaking.

Oak is easy to work and it can be bent by heat without splitting.

Wood naturally is full of occurring oils called vanillins. It is these oils that are drawn out of the cask by the spirit and over the period of maturation they add to the whisky's flavour appeal.

European Oak (Quercus Robur)

Key Notes: – Sherry - Dried Fruits – Sultanas – Candied Peel – Spices
Cinnamon -Nutmeg -Wood – Caramel - Orange – Christmas Cake

American Oak (Quercus Alba)

Key Notes: - Vanilla – Honey - Nuts – Coconut – Almonds – Hazelnuts
Butterscotch – Fudge – Spices – Ginger.
